

Media Release

Released: 21 March 2011

Financial Boot Camp helps Pastors get ‘money wise’

Christian Super has just concluded its second ‘Boot Camp’ designed to help church ministers and pastors understand how to manage their personal finances and ensure they have enough funds for their retirement.

Held in early March, 19 Church of Christ ministers from New South Wales heard presentations from Christian Super CEO, Peter Murphy, Murray Nicholls from Chartered Accountants Saward Dawson, Cornerstone Wealth Financial Planner, Gavin Martin and Focus on the Family Chairman, Neville Cox.

“The goal of the day was to help ministers and pastors understand their own financial needs and to take responsibility for their financial future” said Christian Super CEO, Peter Murphy.

Geoff Brailey from Castle Hill Community Church found the seminar very helpful. “As a 25 year old youth pastor I now feel like I have a vision for my financial future. I feel prepared and am now building a financial plan to support my ministry, now and in the future,” he said.

Ken and Alison Bond from Southern Illawarra Church of Christ appreciated the focus on integrity. “The presenters brought clarity, together with highlighting our personal responsibilities, choices and practical steps to take and where to keep our focus as Christians. At all times personal integrity was emphasised. It was a message we can convey to people in our churches and beyond,” they said.

“After a lifetime of ministry we want to make sure ministers and pastors are able to have a purposeful retirement and our ‘Boot Camp’ is a step towards making this a reality,” Peter said. “It also gives pastors an insight into what many of their church members and congregations deal with as they face challenging financial circumstances,” he said.

Christian Super is planning to run regular ‘Boot Camps’ for churches across various denominations and states.

For more information, visit the Christian Super web site. www.christiansuper.com.au

Contact: Jodi Herbert, Marketing Manager, Christian Super jherbert@christiansuper.com.au Ph: 1800 451 566